Completed in 1859 with the Senate Chamber, the Marble Room originally functioned primarily as a reception room in which Senators could receive guests privately. Referring to the room's classical elegance, nineteenth-century author Mary Clemmer Ames described the Marble Room as the only room in the Capitol that suggested repose – "Its atmosphere is soft, serene, and silent." The grandeur of its high ceilings and massive, fluted marble columns is enhanced by large mirrors on either end of the room's long axis. Today, the Marble Room serves entirely as a withdrawing room – available exclusively to members of the Senate.
